It spreads from one person to another through droplets that may remain contagious for hours or days, depending on the setting of transmission. This is why the government's core response to the emerging pandemic is anchored on social distancing and community quarantine. The idea is simple enough: limit people's social and physical interactions to slow down, if not eliminate, COVID-19 spread, and at the same time, protect vulnerable groups. Following the government decision to extend the ECQ in selected areas and identify GCD areas with attendant regulations, how can we ease up restrictions on people's mobility while minimizing risk? Particularly, how do we respond to the needs of two sectors on both ends of the population spectrum, namely, children and older people? It must be noted that the State is obligated to provide continued learning for the former, and ensure fundamental rights and freedoms of the latter at all times.  The outcome of the analysis is only as good as the quality of available data. For questions or clarifications related to the technical or other aspects of this policy note, please send an email to upsystem@up.edu.ph. Scientific reports related to this statement will be posted with updates online. To shed light on the matter, the UP COVID-19 Pandemic Response Team looked into the countrywide total age-group interactions per day and its implications on school opening and the mobility of older people. The study, from our models, complements existing knowledge on the probability of diseases for cities and municipalities of the country and the situation in nearby cities and more countries (e.g., transport links, border). — See UP Pandemic Response Team Policy Note No. 3
